EXERGAMING OPTIONS – DANCE DANCE REVOLUTION & GAMEBIKE SYSTEMS

A five-month study in an Oregon elementary school found that 120 third- and fourth-graders who played an Exercise Focused Video Game improved in self concepts, social success, and academic performance (Sashek, 2004). At-risk students were selected to be mentors who taught their peers how to play the game. Throughout the school day, time was scheduled for groups of students to play the game together, with a mentor available to help. This extra physical activity during the school day led to improvements in self-image, classroom behavior, social skills, leadership skills, and teamwork; reduced student absenteeism by more than 50 percent; and improved students’ mile run times by an average of about 14 percent. Students reported more enthusiasm for sports, fitness, dance, and PE class than they did before the program began.
